MASTER IN PUBLIC HEALTH (MPH) PROGRAMME (MQA/PA 3722)

The Master in Public Health (MPH) programme is a full-time program. After a complete one-year and obtaining the required credits, candidate will be awarded the degree of Master in Public Health. During the course of study candidate will be guided in lectures, tutorials, small group discussions and other means with the guidance of qualified and experienced faculty members. It is our strategy to teach in evidence-based environment and keep the candidate fully engaged with contemporary public health issues so that he has sound knowledge of global scenario in terms of awareness and practice of public health.

The MPH program is divided into three components, each defining a specific functional area of study. The components are: Core, Professional, Project and Research. The core component contains core courses, which are compulsory for all students of Master of Public Health. The courses provide background knowledge and skills in public health, which are required for any public health expert. The professional component consists of courses, which provide knowledge and skills related to professional public health matters. The Project and Research components comprise a series of research related courses and a research project. The project requires students to demonstrate and present a critical approach to specific issues of public health matters. To complete the MPH program, a candidate must accumulate 34 credit hours of Core Component and Professional Components, and 6 credit hours of Research Project.
