KOTAKINABALU: The Malaysian Productivity Corporation (MPC) conducted a successful seminar on the Malaysia Productivity Blueprint Nexus Conversation at the Hilton Hotel here yesterday.

The seminar featured professional talks on technology and the needs of the legal industry in the state, MPC deputy director Dr Shaik Roslinah Bux, one of the speakers at the event, said when met by reporters.

“We need to encourage the IPTAs and IPTS to ensure that they have industry relevant programmes. This is so that their graduates would be able to meet the market’s needs,” she added.

She explained that the aim of the programme is to expose these students to all the criteria that are needed in the industry, for them to be easily ‘assimilated’ into the market.

The seminar was attended by over 120 participants, comprising members from the state branch of the Institute of Engineers Malaysia, Sabah Architect Association and students from UiTM, UMS, Polytechnic Kota Kinabalu, among others.

the participants, Shaik said she was happy to note that the students were very keen on learning more about productivity.

“Productivity is not something that people would talk about every day. Productivity is not something you can hold, it is something that you have to feel. It is not about whether you are working in the government or private sector. Students and top officials all contribute to productivity,” she said.

Also present at the seminar was MPC Sabah director Izani Ishak.
