Earlier, Harun, in his speech, said the collaboration proves that UMS is moving a step forward in its effort to increase the impact of human resource research and development. "We have many students who are undergoing practical training in JMG as well as UMS researchers getting involved in JMG's projects," he said.

Meanwhile, Yunus said he welcomed the partnership as it could give great impact to the country's energy industry through research.

"We have the data in geoscience and mineral field which can be shared for that purpose. The MoU signed today is not just a beginning, but an encouragement towards other types of collaboration," he said.
